

Our Commitment to You

The University of Windsor is a nationally recognized leader in sexual violence education and support. Our priorities are: Prevent. Resist. Support.

We strive to prevent sexual violence from occurring in the first place.

We believe that change must happen at the level of the community, not just the level of the individual.

We believe sexual assault prevention begins with a culture that prioritizes sexual ethics and behaviour that is grounded in consent and desire.

We believe in community responsibility. We believe that bystanders can make a difference. We believe you can interrupt and prevent sexual violence from happening.

We know that change takes time. Changing communities and cultures takes years and years of work. We are committed to this work.

We know that women, especially young women, are at the greatest risk for sexual violence. We believe women deserve to be taught skills to help them fight back. We believe in sexual assault resistance education.

We believe survivors. We believe that people of any gender can be victims of sexual violence. We believe it is never your fault.

We believe you deserve support. We are here to provide it.
